He also focused on state music from Bakersfield, Calif. Most of the sheet music found today is produced from the 1890s onwards. Early examples of performing favorite songs popular stage production. Later, film and radio introduced popular music to more American homes. Entertainers associated with original versions of these songs are often depicted on musical covers, a side benefit for today's gatherers as a crossover into pop culture memorabilia. This type of ephemera is deep in reclaim on a day that many examples sell more than a million copies when it was first released. Collecting Paper by Gene Utz (Collector's Book—now out of print, available through a used bookstore) reported that Bird in the Gilded Cage sold two million copies in 1900. In 1910, regular songs Let Me Call You Sweetheart and Down By the Old Mill Stream sold a total of five to six million copies each. Any professional musician of the day will have a heap of colorful sheet music stacked on the piano bench and stuck in the box. Amateur musicians patronise traders selling sheet music for use in homespun entertainment as well, especially during the holidays. The faces of early 20th-century personalities such as Al Jolson, Fannie Brice, and Eddie Cantor grabbed many early sheet musical issues. Later, stars of the 1940s such as Bing Crosby and Dorothy Lamour excited fans on the colourful cover pictured. Even sheet music from The Beatles, The Beach Boys and other more recent issues featuring pop culture icons, such as Michael Jackson, are collected today. Better known stars and songs most often hold the most value with some exceptions for sheer rarity or attractive cover illustrations. Competition isn't very intense for this ephemera because there are plenty of song titles to go through, but there are some cases of crossover accumulation when it comes to sheet music. For example, pieces with military themes often attract militaria collectors, also known as military collections. Broadway music fans will find plenty of titles from Rodgers and Hammerstein or Irving Berlin as well. The sports memorabilia collector looked for music with illustrations featuring yram baseball heroes. For example, The Climber's Rag featuring the cameo illustration of the 1911 St. Louis Cardinals baseball team could sell for more than $2,000 in the right market. Other buyers are attracted to a variety of covers featuring the colorful paintings of beautiful women. Framed and hung on the wall, this can create a beautiful accre in the house or office most anyone can appreciate. Because the volume is produced and distributed as stated above, although they are made of paper and can be quite fragile when they are aged, only a few examples of sheet music are really rare. The most common examples sell in the $3 to $5 range today at antique malls and sometimes for even less through internet auctions. For example, it's not uncommon to find many 25 to 30 pieces of sheet music selling online for $10 or less for the entire lot. The most common pieces need to be in excellent condition to bring even a lot of it. However, many pieces of Scott's work bring in high prices, so it's wiser to probing the pieces of inquiry you may have before offering them for sale or burying them in a barrel of charity. For example, The Chrysanthemum Joplin can bring in more than $1,000, and many other sheet music works are sold for $500 or more. Pieces of music fall in. The Black Americana category is also very valuable when in excellent condition for excellent circumstances. Copies of The Hoogie Boogie Dance by Mose Gumble dating to 1901 sold for eBay.com $1,400 in 2016. When filled by famous celebrities, ordinary pieces of sheet music can also soar in value as autograph collectors are running for them as well. And although they are not found often, examples of sheet music that are notable in the early 1800s can also be valuable. These are usually easy sheets of handwritten music that are assembled on paper before the massive printing press. They are illegitimate illustrations and very clearly looking, but again, it is wise to probing what you have before dissing one of these rare items. You may have treasure, although it doesn't look like much. Many.
